As far as I know, every member of the small but mighty team who produced the 2016 Abell Community Street Fair is still standing. There is evidence that at least some may feel stronger for being part of “all the passion and prep” as one organizer aptly put it. She reported being “left with that ebullient feeling of being a part of something special and bigger than our small neighborhood.” All who worked on the Fair are unanimous in their admiration and gratitude for the sterling leadership of the men who co-chaired the team – Jackson Gilman Forlini and Drew Northrup. Everyone is also buoyed by the financial outcome. While we don’t have a complete and final tally of income minus expenses, we know, as Jackson notes on p. 2, that we achieved our fiscal goals.

However, Jackson has also stressed that “more important than the money is the good will and community strength that we built together.” In the weeks and months ahead we will find out the extent of that good will and whether all the dedication, labor and love that went into the 2016 Fair really has made the Abell community stronger. Realistically, the flip side of energetic commitment is burn-out. Right behind the impulse to engage more in community projects swarm all the demands of day to day life. However generous spirited and well meaning we are as a community, the only guarantee that AIA and its various projects will endure is that enough of us will continue to eke out the time and energy to keep them going. As we go forward, then, here are the questions facing us in the immediate future:

- Will more neighbors volunteer to help with the Chili Cook-Off On October 16? (see p. 6)
- What kind of showing will this neighborhood make in the Mayor’s Clean-up on October 22? Will we get more of our environment tidied up and in compliance with the City Code? (see p. 5)
- Will our Neighborhood Walkers continue to grow in number and unity? (see p. 4)
- Will Abell residents be well represented when the Abell and Harwood communities break bread together on November 7? (see p. 6)
- When nominations are open for AIA officers and committee chairs for 2017 will new faces and voices appear to energize the organization and help set the direction for the new year?
- When the time for planning comes next spring how much collective steam will we have for a 2017 Abell Community Street Fair?

With the deepest appreciation for the 17 team members who created a magical day on September 18, and with warmest thanks to all the volunteers without whose help that day could not have succeeded, I look forward to your company and that of all our neighbors as we continue the work of insuring that Abell will always be a wonderful place to live.

Dear Residents of Abell,

If you made it to the 2016 Abell Community Street Fair, I think you’ll agree that the day was a rousing success and a good time was had by all! In addition to giving the neighborhood a chance to relax and have fun, everyone came together for a day of place making, community building, and the preservation of a temporal landmark. On behalf of the Street Fair Committee, thank you for sharing in this wonderful grassroots experience.

The committee is pleased to report that the fair met its annual fundraising goal during the fair. Therefore, AIA will be able to continue to operate for another year and provide programming such as the newsletter, summer film series, maintenance of the Open Space, and award grants to community based programs such as Barclay Elementary Middle School and summer camps at the 29th Street Community Center. If you wish to get more involved in planning the street fair and other events like it, make sure to attend our upcoming membership meetings and please reach out to any of the AIA officers at any time.

Many, many dedicated people made the fair possible. Thank you for being such kind and generous friends and neighbors. Despite the committee’s best efforts to record everyone’s name, the following list of volunteers and contributors is partial. To anyone excluded from this list by oversight, the committee wishes to extend a sincere apology.

Sincerely,
Jackson Gilman-Forlini
Andrew Northrup

Jim Becker and the Roots of LGBTQ Activism in the Abell Community

When Jim Becker was named a Grand Marshal of this year’s Pride celebrations in Baltimore, long overdue recognition was paid for the enormous contributions he has made to the LGBTQ community, many of which he helped launch from his Abell Avenue home. A resident of the 3000 block since the 1970’s, Jim lives with his spouse of 25 years, Jeffrey Clagett, and their Jack Russell Terrier, Sara Lee. A lawyer for 38 years for Baltimore City Social Services, Jim was a founding member of the Baltimore Gay Alliance in 1975. When a Center switchboard was set up to give members of the community a way to know that they were not alone, it operated from Jim’s house in the early years. He was also present at the creation of The Gay Paper (which evolved into Gay Life and has recently merged with Outloud Baltimore). Harboring a flair for journalism, he has regularly contributed pieces to these publications. In the history of The Gay Clinic (now called Chase Brexton) Jim is also a significant figure. Ever self-effacing, Jim told Outloud, “In 1975…I was just one of an amazing group of people that happened to come together and create a synergy of activism that has endured to the present…” We congratulate and salute Jim and wish him many more years of history-making advocacy.

Peace & Quiet Guidelines

Residents of the Abell Community are proud of their sense of neighborliness. The Abell Improvement Association (AIA) urges residents to abide by general community standards of peace and quiet. Certain actions are considered, by much discussion as well as by general consensus, to be “unacceptable behavior” in our neighborhood.

What constitutes unacceptable behavior? Here are some examples:

- Loud, boisterous voices or music that disturbs neighbors. This may be associated with a large gathering of people, a “keg party,” or a parked car.
- Drivers using car horns to get someone’s attention.
- Dogs that bark loudly and excessively.
- Any behavior that negatively affects the safety of residents, children, pets, or visitors.

What should we expect from our neighbors?

- If you are expecting someone to pick you up, wait outside or ask them to call or to come to your door when they arrive. Explain in advance that they should not use their car horn to announce themselves.
- Street or porch conversations should be held at a low, private level, especially in good weather when windows are open. At one in the morning, a conversation on a back balcony can sound like it's inside the next-door bedroom.
- General quiet should prevail during the nighttime hours. Quiet hours are 10 p.m. to 7 a.m. weeknights and midnight to 7 a.m. on weekends.

Baltimore's Neighborhood Nuisance Law

The Neighborhood Nuisance Law (Baltimore City Code, Article 19, Subtitle 43B) provides that, if police are called to a site in violation of the law, they can immediately write a civil citation similar to a speeding ticket. They can cite property owners, property managers, occupants, and/or tenants, and - if the responsible person is under 18 - that person and his/her parents - for a “loud and unruly party,” which is defined as two or more people on private property disturbing the peace through excessive noise, obstruction of public rights-of-way, physical violence, vandalism, littering, or public drunkenness. The law also covers under-age drinking and providing alcohol to individuals under 21.

The penalty for a first offense is $500; for each subsequent offense within 12 months, the penalty is $1000. Property owners or operators can defend against the fine if they can prove that they did not authorize, know about, or participate in the event and that they regained possession of the property or have filed court proceedings to regain possession. When tenants have been cited for violating the law, landlords can give 14 days written notice for tenants to vacate the premises.

The Law on Weeds

Record breaking rainfall in June and a pattern of rainfall above the long term average in July and August may explain the especially tall and abundant weeds that sprung up along curbs, in tree wells and in a number of front yards this summer. An impromptu weeding effort before the Street Fair cleared away some of this unwanted foliage, but much still remains. Hence this friendly reminder from the City Code: “Owners are responsible for ensuring that all lots and exterior premises including abutting sidewalks, gutters and alleys are maintained in a clean, safe and sanitary condition – unless the areas are exclusively controlled by a tenant, such as in a single-family dwelling. Occupants [of such a dwelling] are responsible for keeping the premises that they occupy in clean and sanitary condition...Keep grass, weeds or plant growth below eight inches and remove all noxious weeds....”

For more information on Baltimore City property regulations, see the Housing Code Enforcement Handbook.
